Geo. Washington's New Year's Day. [From the New York Evening Post.]

The levees of President Washington were far more select and rational than those of his successors have been for the last few years. They were numerously attended by all who were fashionable and refined of society; but there were no places for the intrusion of the rabble in crowds, or for the coarse and boistrous partisan-the vulgar electioneerer-or the impudent place-hunter, with boots and frock-coat or with patched knees, and holes at both elbows. On the contrary they were select and more courtly than have been given by any one holding the same office since. Proud of her husband's exalted fame, and jealous of the honors due not only to his own lofty character, but to the dignified station to which a grateful country had called him, Mrs. Washington was careful in her drawing rooms to exact those courtesies to which she knew the President was entitled.

Fortunately, moreover, the rudeness of the present day had not then so far gained the ascendancy as to banish good manners, and the charms of social intercourse were heightened by a reasonable attention in the best circles to these forms and usages which indicate the well-bred assemblage, and throw around it an air of elegance and grace which only the envious affect to decry, and only the vulgar ridicule and contemn. None, therefore, were admitted to the levees but those who had either a right by official station to be there, or were entitled to the privilege by established merit and character; and full dress was required of all. Some show, if not of state, at least of respect, for the high office to be visited, was exacted down to the close of Mr. Madison's ad ministration. Mr. Monroe required less formality and attention to dress, and the second President Adams less still.

Mrs. Washington, was pleasing and agreeable rather than a brilliant woman. Her figure was not commanding, but her manners were easy, conciliatory, and attractive. Her domestic arrangements were always concerned under her own eye, and everything within her household moved forward with the regularity of machinery. No daughter of Eve ever worshipped her lord with more sincere and affectionate veneration; and none had ever greater cause to render homage. When absent he was ever in her thoughts, and her mild eyes kindled at his presence. She was well educated, and possessed strong native sense, guided by all necessary prudence and discretion. She rarely conversed upon political subjects, and when the most expert diplomatists would attempt to draw her out, she had the faculty of turning the conversation with equal dexterity and politeness. At all the President's entertainments, whether at the table or in the drawing room, notwithstanding the regard to etiquette heretofore reverted to, there was nevertheless so much kindness of feeling displayed, and such an unaffected degree of of genuine hospitality, that golden opinions were won alike from the foreign and domestic visitors.

In those days, also, late hours were not necessary, and many of our fair metropolitan readers who are in the habit of dressing at 10 to enter a drawing room at 11, will doubtless be surprised to learn that Mrs. Washington's levees closed always at 9.

This was a rule which that distinguished lady established on the occasion of holding her first levee on the evening of Jan, 1, 1790. The President's residence was in the old Franklin House in this city, at the head of Cherry street. The day was uncommonly mild and pleasant. The moon was full, and the air was so bland and serene that the ladies attended in their light summer dresses. Having been introduced by the aides and gentlemen in waiting, tea, coffee, plain and plum cake were handed round. Familiar and friendly conversation ensued, and kind inquiries on the part of Mrs. Washington after the families of the exiles, with whom she had been acquainted during the Revolutionary War, and who always received marked attention from Gen. Washington. Mrs. Washington stood by the side of the General in receiving the respects of the visitors. Amid the social chit chat of the evening the clock struck 9. Mrs. Washington thereupon rose with dignity, and looking around the circle with a complacent smile, observed, "The General always retires at 9, and I usually precede him." At this hint the ladies instantly rose, adjusted their dresses, made their salutations, and retired.

Gen. Washington had on that day been waited upon by the principal gentlemen of the city according to the ancient New York custom of social and convivial New Year's visiting. After having been severally introduced, and having paid the usual compliments of the season, the citizens interchanged greetings and withdrew. highly gratified by the friendly notice of the President, to most of whom he was personally a stranger. In the course of the evening, while speaking of the occurrences of the day, Mrs. Washington remarked: 'Of all the incidents of the day, none so pleased the General, by which title she always designated, him as the friendly greeting of the gentlemen who visited him at noon." To the inquiry of the President whether it was casual or acustomary, he was answered that it was an annual custom derived from our Detch fore fathers, which had always been commemorated from the earliest beginnings of New Amsterdam.
After a short pause he observed: "The highly favored cituation of New York will, in the process of years attract numerous immigrants, who will gradually change its ancient customs and manners; but whatever changes take place never forget the cordial, cheerful observance of New Year's Day."
